

Questions to answer in groups.

1. Study the two photographs of camp monuments and form an overall impression. Next, divide each picture into four parts and look for details. Then, make a chart with three columns: people, object and activities. Look at each photograph again and list important details in each column.
2. Compare and contrast the two different photographs. What is similar? What is different? What can you learn about the photos when you compare them to each other?
3. Write down any questions the photographs inspire you to ask.
4. Read the article, “A Monument Recalls Hatred Born of War.” How does the author describe the way Arkansans remember this chapter of their state history? Do you think things have changed since 1972, when the article was written? Explain.
5. If you were going to design a monument to Japanese Americans, what would it look like?

Rohwer Cemetery Now: Courtesy of Drew Harris. Photo by Drew Harris